Clinician: Good morning, Anna. How are you feeling today?

Patient: Much better than when I came in. I'm still a little tired, and I cough occasionally, but I don't feel as breathless as before.

Clinician: That's encouraging. We're planning to discharge you today. I'd like to go through your instructions carefully so you know what to do at home.

Patient: Yes, please. There was quite a lot of information yesterday, and I don't remember everything.

Clinician: That's completely understandable. First, please take your medication exactly as listed on your discharge medication sheet. Don't change the dose or stop a prescribed medicine without checking with your healthcare team.

Patient: Okay. I have the medication sheet here. I'll follow what's written on it.

Clinician: Good. Your follow-up appointment is scheduled for Tuesday, 3 November, at 10:30 in the morning. Please bring your medication list and any questions you have.

Patient: Tuesday the third, at half past ten. I'll put that in my calendar.

Clinician: Now, let's talk about warning signs. If your breathing becomes significantly worse, you develop severe chest pain, or you become confused or faint, seek emergency medical help immediately. If you develop a new or worsening symptom that concerns you but isn't an emergency, contact your healthcare team for advice.

Patient: Right. So if my breathing gets worse, I can wait until Tuesday and mention it at the appointment, unless it gets really bad?

Clinician: I want to clarify that. If your breathing becomes significantly worse, you should not wait for Tuesday. Seek emergency medical help. For other new or worsening symptoms that aren't emergencies, contact the healthcare team rather than waiting for the appointment.

Patient: Oh, I see. I shouldn't wait if my breathing gets significantly worse. And for other concerning symptoms, I should call the healthcare team.

Clinician: Exactly. Can you tell me in your own words what you would do if your breathing became significantly worse tonight?

Patient: I would seek emergency medical help rather than wait until the morning or my appointment.

Clinician: Correct. Also, please follow the hydration and rest guidance in your discharge instructions. Gradually return to your usual activities as you feel able, unless your written instructions say otherwise.

Patient: Understood. I'll take it easy and follow the sheet.

Clinician: One final thing: if you miss a dose of medication, don't assume you should take an extra dose. Check the instructions for that specific medication and contact your pharmacist or healthcare team if the instructions don't answer your question.

Patient: I think I understand. If I miss a dose, I should take two doses together to catch up, right?

Clinician: No—please don't assume that. Whether to take a missed dose depends on the particular medication. Follow the medication-specific instructions and ask your pharmacist or healthcare team if you're unsure.

Patient: Okay. I won't double a dose unless the medication-specific instructions or a healthcare professional tells me what to do.

Clinician: That's right. Before you leave, do you have any other questions or concerns?

Patient: No, I think that's everything. I'll keep the discharge sheet nearby, put the appointment in my calendar, and ask for help if something doesn't seem right.

Clinician: Very good. We'll give you a copy of the instructions and the contact details for your healthcare team. Please make sure you know how to reach them before you leave.

Patient: Thank you, Doctor.

Clinician: You're welcome, Anna. Take care.
